

Fundamentals of databases revision

Questions

1. A primary key is a key which is used to point to each unique record in the table. A foreign key is a primary key from a table that is used as a field in another table.
2. A flat file database has only one file which contains all the tables, where as a relational file database has multiple files which contain the tables and the relations between the files.
3.  $\epsilon^4$